Prep.LA

Charles Zhang, Victoria Delk, and Zack Pakin

The Community

- This project is dedicated to empowering UCLA students from the Los Angeles area who attended public high schools, focusing on traditionally disadvantaged groups

- It aims to shed light on the disparities in support experienced by different students, highlighting the importance of equitable access to resources

- Given the significant number of first-generation and low-income students applying to UCLA, understanding the level of support they received becomes paramount in creating a more inclusive educational environment

The Outcome

- Highlights the disparities in how supported students from the same geographical location feel about their high school experience and how it prepared them for future steps

- Learn about what facets of support students felt were most valuable through their stories and experiences

The Site

Going Forward

- Improve UI and ensure that development follows design and data justice

- Include user stories to include personal narratives from the community and amplify their voices

- Gather more data points to give the map more depth

- Create a layer that allows the user to toggle between different groups of students